Abstract

FP7-ICT Strategic Targeted Research Project PHEME (No. 611233)
Deliverable D7.2.1 (WP 7)

This deliverable describes the creation and annotation of two corpora of tweets on legal highs and prescribed medication. It provides a short summary of the aims and objectives of WP7, a demonstration work package for the PHEME project, and its demonstration studies. The development of the corpora is presented for each of the two case studies together with a detailed methodology of their annotation. Lastly, both corpora with their corresponding manually-annotated codes are provided. The aim of this deliverable is to describe the initial version of the development and annotation of two corpora of tweets corresponding to the first two demonstration studies of WP7.

Keyword list: tweets, corpora, annotation, mephedrone, paliperidone, pregabalin, clozapine.

Executive Summary

This deliverable, firstly, provides a summary of the aims and objectives of PHEME's WP7 together with a short description of the 4 demonstration studies under development. Demonstration studies 1 and 2 are the focus of the main report.

The background and aims of our first demonstration study on social media and medication choices is presented. The methodology for the development of the corpus and search terms related to medication in Twitter is then described. The annotation processes of medication-related tweets for clozapine, paliperidone and pregabalin as well as the results arising from this activity are reported in detail.

For our second demonstration study on social media and 'legal highs', we provide a short summary of the background and objectives. We present the methodology for corpus and related-terms selection of both Twitter and clinical records. The process and results from the annotation of mephedrone-related tweets and mephedrone-related instances in the clinical notes are then described in detail.

We conclude this report by outlining how the development of this deliverable will contribute to future work and summarise the next steps to deliverable 7.2.

1 Introduction

1.1 WP7 – Veracity intelligence for patient care

The PHEME project is focusing on social media veracity, a largely unstudied big data computational challenge. It will model, identify and verify information as it spreads across media, languages and social networks and test this system in two case studies: WP7 and WP8 (digital journalism).

The broad aims of WP7 are to turn the project technologies toward practical applications in the healthcare domain, to enable health professionals and policy makers to analyse Internet content for emerging medically-related patterns, rumours, and other health-related issues. This analysis may in turn be used (i) to develop educational materials for patients and the public, by addressing concerns and misconceptions, and (ii) to link to analysis of the electronic health records.

The objective of WP7 is therefore to carry out research towards a PHEME-based platform for the medical domain for multi-channel media monitoring, extraction, verification, and visualisation of automatically extracted knowledge across media and languages. This case study provides the integration of PHEME's technology into a (hospital-based) health records application and methodological and user verification, for the ultimate goals of monitoring health related rumours and misinformation in social media (<http://www.pHEME.eu/>).

To this end, there are 4 main demonstration studies being considered in WP7. The aims of these studies will be to:

- 1) Identify social media attitudes towards certain medications and how these are present in clinical records.
- 2) Monitor the emergence of novel psychoactive substances in social media, and identify if and how promptly they appear in clinical records.
- 3) Explore how mental health stigma arises in social media and presents in clinical records.
- 4) Ascertain the type of influence social media might have on young people at risk of self-harm or suicide.

In order to detect rumours, particularly those pertaining to misinformation and controversy, which are widespread in online healthcare information, it is important to firstly develop a classification based on (i) whether the tweets truly refer to the terms in question, when these may be also used in different contexts and (ii) the tweet stance in negating or confirming the term. This will accurately generate trending topics, which are very important in detecting rumours in the early stages (Zhao et al, 2015) and could be applied to both emergency and non-critical situations where reliable information sources are not available (Mendoza et al, 2010). The aim of this deliverable is to describe the first step in creating and annotating two corpora of tweets for demonstration studies 1 and 2, which we describe next.

2 Demonstration study 1 – Social media and medication choices

2.1 Background

In summary, social media have transformed the way information is filtered relating to medication and treatment, symptom recognition and even choice of physician. Being able to relate personal experiences to a wide audience has made gathering knowledge vital to health and medical care instantly accessible through the Internet. Even health professionals have created online communities to consult with peers (i.e. Doximity; <https://www.doximity.com/>). Undoubtedly, patients feel more enabled and clinicians are more confident in their practice but how does online exchange and uncertain credibility of information affect the mental healthcare choices of particular patient groups?

2.2 Aims and objectives

The main aim of this study will be to identify social media attitudes about certain medications in mental healthcare and how these relate to outcomes derived from clinical records. Its objective will be to describe the interaction between online discussions on controversial medication issues and occurrences (such as comments around treatment adherence) in clinical records as well as to investigate the effects of processing healthcare information from untrustworthy sources on particular patient groups.

2.2.1 Specific aims

The particular aims of this demonstration study will be to:

- 1) Determine the attitude towards pre-specified medications in social media.
- 2) Establish whether this social media stance is reflected in the clinical records.
- 3) Investigate the extent to which patients' choice of and adherence to medication may be influenced by how these are discussed in social media.
- 4) Examine whether clinicians' prescribing practices are affected by social media responses to certain medications.

2.3 Annotation process

2.3.1 Corpus selection

Tweets were archived from a Twitter garden hose feed licensed by the University of Sheffield, starting in mid-2009. These comprise a random 10% sampling of all tweets (Kergl et al, 2014) and are kept in daily or hourly Lempel–Ziv–Oberhumer (LZO) files. The files are stored in a Hadoop cluster using the Hadoop Distributed File System (HDFS) architecture. The files themselves comprise line-break, separated twitter JavaScript Object Notation (JSON) with one record per tweet; the records include not only the tweet text but also all metadata (e.g. timestamp, number of users who re-tweeted or favoured it, and occasionally geo-location of tweet) and a copy of the user's profile. To search the tweets for given sets of terms, we avoid de-serialising all JSON to match text and instead perform fast Aho-Corasick matching (Aho and Corasick, 1975) per record on an eight-node Hadoop cluster, while file searches are distributed. This gives a refined subset of all records that contain potential matches. These records are then JSON de-serialised and matching terms are searched for in just the tweet text field. This process is performed in Python, again distributed over the cluster. The resulting data is a monolithic file of line-break separated Twitter JSON, which can be loaded directly into other tools, e.g. GATE TwitIE (Bontcheva et al., 2013).

2.3.2 Search terms

A gazetteer of medication has been created, which comprises over 100 generic medications as well as their common uses. This was developed by including all psychotropic medication listed in the British National Formulary 2014 (BNF 67, 2014). As a first step, data from Twitter were extracted for 3 drugs (generic and brand names): clozapine (Clozaril, Fazaclo, Versacloz, Clopine, Zaponex), paliperidone (Invega, Invega Sustenna) and pregabalin (Lyrica) for years 2009, 2010 and 2012 (extraction for years 2011, 2013 and 2014 is ongoing).

2.3.4 Methodology

Annotation was performed into two parts. In part 1, two annotators manually annotated all extracted tweets based on whether they:

- were actual correspondence (e.g. ‘@lzut31 yeah that paper pretty much sums up why DA antagonists like clozapine are used. the animal models are pretty good too’),
- included an external link to information (e.g. ‘Sinus News: Cerebral Venous Sinus Thrombosis May Be Associated With Clozapine - Journal of Neuropsych. <http://bit.ly/14Gq36>’)
- were advertisements (e.g. <http://twurl.nl/inklsi> voltarol, lamprene, furazolidone, lamictal, stromectol, clozapine, buy). Tweets were coded as unclear, if classification could not be made with certainty.

In part 2, a collective resolution of the disagreements from part 1 was completed to reach 100% agreement.

2.3.5 Results

The extraction from Twitter produced 687 tweets for clozapine, 356 for paliperidone and 519 for pregabalin. For clozapine, 91 tweets were annotated as actual correspondence, 335 as links to information, 199 as advertisements and 62 were unclear. For paliperidone, 51 were annotated as actual, 105 as links to information, 44 as advertisements and 156 were unclear. For pregabalin, 64 were annotated as actual, 230 as links to information, 71 as advertisements and 154 were unclear. Table 1 shows the distribution of the 4 annotation codes by search term. Inter-annotator agreement was not judged necessary as all extracted tweets were double-annotated and all disagreements resolved.

3 Demonstration study 2 – Social media and ‘legal highs’

3.1 Background

The growing prevalence of novel psychoactive substances (NPS), commonly referred to as ‘legal highs’, and the rapid rate with which they appear, places healthcare providers at a great disadvantage. These substances are marketed through hundreds of unregulated online shops and clinicians are often unaware of recently-appearing compounds. Furthermore, the ‘branding’ of these drugs and the actual composition of the substance render effects are difficult to predict both by the user and by the healthcare professional (ACMD, 2011), which increases the risk of adverse consequences. With one new NPS, on average, appearing on the drug market every week, it is becoming increasingly urgent to monitor emergent substances and establish new diffusion trends.

3.2 Aims and objectives

The main objective of this study will be to monitor the emergence of novel psychoactive substances in social media, the controversies surrounding them and identify if and how promptly they appear in mental health clinical records.

3.2.1 Specific aims

The particular aims of this demonstration study will be to:

- 1) Determine the incidence of references to novel psychoactive substances in clinical records.
- 2) Establish the time lag between the emergence of a novel psychoactive substance in social media and how controversial user information and changes in legal status might affect its appearance in clinical records.
- 3) Utilise sentiment-bearing expressions (positive and negative references) in describing experiences referring to novel psychoactive substances in clinical records.
- 4) Describe the characteristics of mental health records in which NPS appear – for example, by service context, diagnosis, or demographic profile.

3.3 Annotation process

3.3.1 Corpus selection

The selection of corpora was completed from both Twitter (see Chapter 2, section 2.3.1) and electronic health records from the South London and Maudsley Case Register using the Clinical Records Interactive Search (CRIS) system (<http://www.slam.nhs.uk/about/core-facilities/cris>). This case register contains anonymised patient records from the largest UK-based mental healthcare provider in Europe, delivering comprehensive mental health services to a geographic catchment of over 1.2 million residents. Access is governed by an oversight committee and service users are given the choice of whether they want to opt out of allowing their data to be used for research. Extraction of the data from the clinical records was carried out using the natural language processing software called Texthunter (Jackson et al, 2014), which also provided a manual annotation environment. Regular expressions were used to enter the search terms of interest in order to account for most common spelling variations and mistakes (e.g. the term “miao* miao*” would capture both “miao miao” and “miaow miaow”). Sentences containing terms matched by the regular expressions, defined above, were extracted from the clinical records.

3.3.2 Search terms

Following consultation with a substance use specialist at the National Addiction Centre, King’s College London, (www.kcl.ac.uk/ioppn/depts/addictions/index.aspx), we shortlisted 17 legal highs for exploration. A list of slang/street names commonly associated with these substances has been produced for searching social media and clinical records (Table 2). A preliminary search of these terms through the CRIS system revealed mephedrone to be the most commonly referenced NPS. Reference to other NPS was widely infrequent and further research into these substances was considered impractical. Therefore, subsequent data extraction and annotation of tweets and clinical records were restricted to mephedrone only.

3.3.3 Methodology

Tweet annotation was performed in two phases as per demonstration study 1. Firstly, two annotators manually annotated all extracted tweets based on whether they were a true instance of mephedrone reference (e.g. '@missmegafun I am in wigan off my face on wkd, steroids, viagra and m-cat') or a false instance of mephedrone reference (e.g. 'no kitty cat waiting for me when i got home. i have no idea where he is. i hope he's having fun.'). Tweets were coded as unclear, if classification could not be made with certainty. Then, a collective resolution of the disagreements from the first round of annotations was implemented to reach 100% agreement.

In the clinical records, sentences containing mephedrone and its related terms were annotated by a single annotator according to whether the context was:

- a reference to presence of mephedrone use (e.g. patient reported using mephedrone on a daily basis)
- a reference to absence of mephedrone use (e.g. patient denied the use of mephedrone)
- an occurrence of the term mephedrone not pertaining to patient use (e.g. patient was given information on mephedrone / patient was arrested on possession of mephedrone)

These categories were labelled 'positive', 'negative' and 'unknown' respectively. A second round of annotations was then undertaken on the positive category to identify whether the patients were currently taking mephedrone, had taken it at some point in the past, or if it was unclear from the context as to when mephedrone was taken.

3.3.3 Results

The mephedrone-related query produced 27806 tweets, of which 5000 were double-annotated. Since only a portion of the tweets were annotated, an inter-annotator agreement analysis using the Kappa statistic was performed to determine consistency among the two annotators. This was found to be Kappa=0.861 ($p < 0.001$), 95% CI (0.846, 0.877) (Table 3). This is an outstanding value showing a good level of agreement (Landis and Koch, 1977).

Negative	42	3609	192	3843
Unclear	2	22	274	298

Nonetheless, 100% agreement was reached after collective resolution of disagreements. The final agreed annotations are as follows: 903 positive, 3932 negative and 165 unknown. Table 4 shows the distribution of the 3 annotation codes by individual mephedrone-related terms in the annotated tweets as well as in the complete data set.

4 Progress so far and steps to D7.2 for M24

4.1 Medication choices

- 1) Completion Twitter data extraction for 2011/13/14
- 2) Twitter extraction for the 20 most commonly mentioned medications in the clinical records
- 3) Classification of attitudes towards these medications and statements of compliance/adherence and prescribing practices
- 4) Detection of news stories related to medications of interest
- 5) Establishment of clinical events and groups to explore

4.2 Mephedrone

- 1) Complete Twitter data extraction for 2014
- 2) Develop machine learning-based approach to detect mephedrone references for the rest of the tweets
- 3) Final report on variations in frequency of mephedrone mentions in Twitter, how it relates to the incidence of mephedrone references in the clinical records and the characteristics of clinical groups where current use is mentioned

4.3 Mental health stigma

- 1) Preliminary list of negative terms most commonly used to denote mental illness has been compiled based on paper by Rose et al, 2007
- 2) List of mental health disorders of interest is being finalised
- 3) Classification of positive and negative sentiments surrounding particular diagnoses
- 4) Detection of news stories likely to facilitate stigmatising chatter in social media
- 5) Identification of clinical events and groups to explore

4.4 Self-harming and suicidal behaviour

- 1) Establishment of pro/against self-harm/suicide statements
- 2) Identification of news stories related to these behaviours
- 3) Definition of vulnerable clinical groups and clinical events of interest
